It May Increase the Republican Vote by Making Farmers Quit Work.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 4 .- A. B. Cummins. Republican candidate for Governor, closed his campaign at a large meeting in the Auditorium in this city this evening. He was assisted by ex-Governor Frank D. Jackson and Hon. Sidney A. Foster. John Briar, in charge of the literary bureau of the Republican state committee, said today that the heavy snow throughout Iowa would increase the Republican vote 10,000 by driving the farmers from the cornfields and giving them a chance to cast their bal-

The Republican vote for McKinley last year was 307,818. The state central committee estimates that there will be a falling off of about 15 per cent. from last year's vote, or a decrease of not far from 45,000. If these figures are realized Mr. Cummins's vote will be in the neighborhood of 260,000, or 21,000 more than the total vote received by Leslie M. Shaw two years ago. Shaw's plurality was 56,163. Add to this figure the 21,000 additional Republican votes as estimated and the result is a plurality of 77,000. Frank Q. Stuart, of the Democratic committee, is or opinion that the Republican plurality in Iowa will be substantially lowered this year. He thinks the Democratic nominees on the county tickets over the State are a better class of men than ever before nominated, and he believes that when election is over and the result is announced the number of Democratic county time in recent years.

In 1899 there were 3,100 precincts in the State. This year there are 3,234 precincts. Both sides to-night repeat their previous claims. The betting is at various odds on the Republicans and mostly on the size of the plurality. The most spirited betting is on the legislative results in Cuyahoga, Frankila and other doubtful counties. ### POLITICAL HONESTY.

William Allen White Makes a Plea for American Politics.

In the preface of his new book, "Stratagems and Spoils, Stories of Love and Politics," William Allen White, the Kansas editor, politician and writer, embodies a vigorous defense of American political honesty. From so experienced an authority it comes with peculiar force and seems to have a special interest at this time. He says:

"But to come to politics: There is much scandalous talk by scantily informed people about the corruption of politics. The truth of the matter is that politicians are about as honest in their business as storekeepers are in their business, or lawyers are in their business, or bankers, or preachers, or day laborers, or farmers, or college professors are in their own callings. "Of course, politicians are not so honest as lawyers imagine they would be if they were preachers, nor as preachers fancy they would be if they were storekeepers, nor as storekeepers believe they would be as lawyers.

"But in the main the business or professional man has no reason to despise the politician, for the politician does not lie unless he is forced to by another man's duplicity (which is the standard in other vocations.) He does not take bribes except in ignorance—as the business man and the farmer and the preacher do every day of does not admire the cheat and the deceiver.

"The political ideals of the average ward caucus are as high as the ideals in most other gatherings. The brave man, who wins by raw courage and shrewd directness and simple honesty, is honored as sincerely and sunrise to sunset, and the public offices is as successful in politics to-day as he is in any other branch of human endeavor, however exalted its criterion. The county convention of Douglas county, Kansas, or of Kings county, New York, is operated on a moral plane about as high as the faculty politics of the average university or as that of the church politics of the various religious organizations. "In the business of politics we are all partners. The concern reflects the American average. The man who does not participate in the partnership-who refuses to votemerely drags down the average for an honest negro or an active Polak or a capable Irish emigrant to elevate.'

WISE CHANGES IN THE NAVY.

Healthful Influence of Giving Enlisted Men a Chance for Promotion. Providence Journal.

The recent promotion of two warrant officers in our navy to the rank of ensign marks a departure in that branch of servlish and half in Hawaiian, and will be de- ice, or rather, perhaps, a return to earlier customs. In the United States army the practice of promoting men from the ranks been working at the naval wharf under | for merit has always prevailed, and there is no good reason why similar chances should not be given to the bluejackets of the navy when they are able to pass the examinations required of graduates of Annapolis. For a long time officers of the navy have complained of the difficulty of securing a good class of men as recruits from among native-born citizens. But this is not surprising in the face of the fact that the grade of warrant officer was the highest to which an enlisted man could aspire, not matter what talents he might possess or what might be the length of his service. Such a state of affairs would naturally deter many a young man with a taste for sea life from entering a career in which ambition must be laid aside, and when, by the very putting on of a uniform, he would confess to his friends and acquaintances that he had resigned all desire to rise and had consented to always occupy a subordinate position. Now, however, this is all changed, and a foremast hand, by paying strict attention to duty, studying hard and leading a corto recommend it for offices, sick-rooms, rect life, may find himself in line of promotion to the highest rank. It has been objected that enlisted men have not the social advantages enjoyed by the cadets of the Naval Academy and that any such who might receive commissions would stand on a different plane and might be found wanting in situations requiring tact and delicacy of handling. But this objection needs little attention. Men of ability make their way even if their manners may be a little rough and not equal to those of the young man who is most at home at young ladies' afternoon teas. A perfect comprehension of the fact that the officers of the United States navy understand their business will count much more with the representatives of foreign powers than any suavity of manner.

I recall a little incident he told me that occurred during the famous campaign of 1896. The President usually looked over these speeches to be made to him, fearing something might be said which the newspapers would take up. "It isn't what I am to say that worries me, It's what the other fellow may say to me I'm looking out for." He took the chairman of the delegation into the little dining room and began reading his speech. As he read the cold chills ran over him.
